Thomas Donigan Found Dead Fava Said to Have Prophesied with a Big Cut in His Head.

Police Theory that He Was Killed Gladys Evelyn Loses Her Suit in a Beer-Dive Quarrel.

What is believed to be a case of murder is what is believed to be a case of murder is bothering the police of the Educateth street gration this morning. A man was found dead, gration this morning. A man was found dead, sub an urly gash across the right side of his later at Washington, passed through Parbeat, in an alley on Mulberry street and sp-beat, in an alley on Mulberry street and sp-pearances indicated that he nad been the Walle declining to be formally interviewed mough he had been seen around the place affair was reached.

Nugent got a stretcher and took the body Mrs. Langtry to Appear in a Revival Sherer and Price started out to investigate. ndero, proprietress of an Italian saloon the alley at 20 Mulberry street, for violating the Excise law.

The woman said that the dead man had been a the saloon during the afternoon, but he had salary of £150 a week.

The detectives soon learned that the dead man was Thomas Donigan, a brickmaker, mirty-six years old, of Hackensack, N. J., who had come from Baltimore during the past een visiting the various beer dives along urn to Hackensack, and parted with his Donigan was very poorly dressed, and the theory that he got into a row with some Italian and was by them as-sulfied finds support in the f.ct that the locality where the body was found bears a very ban reputation.

An Expanso Wonth reporter visited the place this morning. The aliey is about four feet while and extends hack about one handred feet. The side entrance to the salron is about seventy-five feet away and the place is dark and gloomy, owing to the big tenements that tower above it on either side.

Detective Sherer saul this morning that the case was in many ways peculiar. The deep and utyl booking out on Donigan's head might have been caused by a fail, though that theory looked doubtful. Robberty, it would seem, was not a motive for homicide in this case; it was most likely, in his opinion, that the man had been killed in a quarrel.

Donigan's body was tying in the back yard of the Elizaceth street station this morning swating examination by the Coroner. An autopsy will snow whether the injuries were probably inflicted by a blow or a fail.
